How did the Fund perform last year?

- Slowing inflationary pressures and hopes of interest rate cuts drove global equities higher for the reporting period even as geopolitical strife and trade tensions increased.
- Driven by enthusiasm for artificial intelligence, information technology stocks propelled to record highs.
- While the European Central Bank cut its primary lending rate, the Bank of Japan increased interest rates. Japan’s central bank also engaged in buying the Japanese yen in open markets to pause the currency’s decline.
- Market sentiment swung late in the period, shifting away from information technology stocks amid growing uncertainty about economic growth, geopolitics, and the upcoming U.S. presidential election.

What contributed to performance?

Japanese equities, which comprise about 23% of the Fund on average, contributed the most to the Fund’s return during the reporting period. Japan’s stock market accelerated to new highs, helped by ongoing corporate reforms and the Bank of Japan ending its negative interest rate policy. This interest rate increase helped Japanese banks increase lending profits and net interest margins (the difference between interest revenue and interest expenses of a financial firm). In the United Kingdom, which comprises about 15% of the Fund on average, the financials sector was helped by solid lending income attributed to higher interest rates.

What detracted from performance?

Hong Kong stocks suffered from malaise related to economic weakness in China during the reporting period. As a special administrative region of China, many stocks are dual listed in Hong Kong and China and are more susceptible to China’s recent economic slowdown and regulatory scrutiny. Hong Kong’s financials sector was particularly impacted by slowing Chinese growth, while slumping property values hindered the real estate sector.
