How did the Fund perform during the period?

- Slowing inflationary pressures and hopes of interest rate cuts drove global equities higher for the reporting period.
- U.S. stocks powered markets higher, driven by the enthusiasm for artificial intelligence. Emerging markets lagged their developed peers, held back by weakness in China’s recovery and a strengthening U.S. dollar.
- Central bank actions began to diverge as the European Central Bank cut its primary lending rate, the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank left interest rates unchanged, and the Bank of Japan exited its zero-interest rate policy that it had held since 2016.
- Bonds underperformed equities but still delivered generally positive total returns during the reporting period.

What contributed to performance?

Both equity and fixed income asset classes advanced during the reporting period. Across the LifePath® vintages, U.S. large-capitalization stocks were the largest driver of returns. The information technology sector was led by several firms that rapidly innovated, captured significant market share, and generated substantial profits. International developed stocks benefited from the sharp rally in Japanese stocks, supported by central bank actions and improved corporate governance.

The bond allocation also gained during the reporting period. Treasury yields (yields move inversely to price) experienced extreme fluctuations as shifting monetary policy decisions and geopolitical events created uncertainty and volatility. Mortgage-backed securities benefited as they provided higher yields than those of U.S. Treasuries, especially as investors sought higher returns. Investment-grade corporate bonds gained amid stable corporate fundamentals.

What detracted from performance?

Given the strength of equity and bond markets during the reporting period, there were no material detractors to the Fund’s performance.
